Fifteen Dollars Reward.

RAN AWAY on Saturday, the 5th of this month, a bright Mulatto Man, named STEPHEN; about 23 or 30 years of age: He is about 5 feet 7 or 8 inches high, pleasant countenance, speaks rather flow, but very active and handy at any work; he served an apprenticeship to a weaver, is a good workman at that business, and a remarkable good hand in a brickyard; in short, he is smart at any thing he is set about; he is very fond of spirits of any kind. I cannot describe his dress. He never ran away before, so I expect he has been enticed off by some artful villain; if it be the case, and the man can be apprehended, I will give 50 Dollars on his conviction of the theft.

From the WASHINGTON FEDERALIST.

The following numbers of Charles H. W. Wharton have been placed in our hands for some time. We have exercised a discretionary power lodged with us, as to the time of commencing them. The paper and the public attention has been so much occupied with the congressional proceedings, that we judged it best to delay these numbers, till more leisure would ensue them a more welcome reception.

In giving these pieces to the public, we cannot but sympathize with the feelings of a young man in thus submitting his literary efforts to the rigid critic and unfeeling politician. Were we to give our own opinion as to their merits, there would be those, who might attribute it rather to the partiality of friendship, than the candid deduction of criticism. Their merits is not confined to mere diction and argument. When we view in them the youthful and ingenious mind, ardent in the cause of freedom and anxious for the happiness of his country, they become doubly interesting and instructive. We perceive with what care, the unmeaning or insidious professions of disinterested patriotism, captivate the imagination and bias the judgment of youth and inexperience. Devoid of guile itself, the youthful mind expects to find equal sincerity and candor in every person it meets. Vain expectation, delusive hope; how many have fallen victims to this amiable weakness. Such is not the situation of our author. He has had the industry and boldness to examine into the foundation of his political creed and the candor to acknowledge his errors. In doing this he must expect to meet with calumny and abuse, those fruitful offsprings of party rancor and democratic rage and persecution.

That the present ruling party, which has arisen from such small beginnings, should brand those with the epithets of "opposite and turncoat," who dare to withdraw from their mad career, would be a subject of surprise, were it not for the contradictions in conduct and opinions which they daily exhibit. As was formerly very aptly observed by a celebrated "Recantator," they might find in their own conduct and opinions, a sufficient excuse for others, were they actuated by a love of truth and candor. But when so many causes of disapprobation, and so many grounds of complaint, are added such flagrant departures from professions as are constantly displayed by the present ruling party, we need not wonder that the honest patriot, the sincere lover of his country, the candid enquirer after truth should withdraw from them his confidence and support. But this subject is imperceptibly leading us farther than we intended. We will not longer detain the reader from the first of these numbers, to which these observations were intended as introduction.

For the Washington Federalist.

An address to the inhabitants of Montgomery county, Maryland; by their fellow citizen, CHARLES H. W. WHARTON.

NUMBER I.

The inference generally drawn from a change of political sentiments—the harsh and virulent invectives applied to him, who from honest conviction abandons his party, are almost sufficient to deter one less timid than myself from an open avowal of principles, against the predominant cy of which his talents however feeble they may be, were once exerted. As that avowal however has been publicly made through the medium of the Washington Federalist, it now becomes a duty which I owe to my own character, to assign the reasons which urged me to the step; but before entering immediately on the subject, I beg leave to make a few remarks on that almost universal custom among democrats of impeaching and censuring the motives of him, who from the very best intentions abandons their party; and enlists under the banners of federalism. There is not a subject in nature (except politics) on which the greatest latitude of opinion is not tolerated—we may differ in our sentiments on religion—we may differ in our opinions of the merits of the sages and heroes of antiquity—we may pronounce a Solon a fool, an Aristides unjust; or a Cincinnatus a tyrant; and tho' in this opinion, we would discover to our antagonist a want of sense and taste, yet the motives on which the opinion itself is grounded are not deemed by him proper subjects of personal hostility. But no sooner does a man change his political creed; no sooner is he the opposer of Mr. Jefferson and his sect, than the shafts of malevolence are levelled against him. His character is then fair game. It must be attacked: the integrity of his motives must be called into question; he is branded with the appellation of trimmer, and held up to his fellow citizens as a consummate hypocrite. Such has been the language applied to the candid and eloquent Mr. Baker; and such are the terms which, with a liberal hand I may expect will be lavished on me. But to these censures, as I have before said, I am perfectly indifferent. Democratic insolence shall never deter me from pursuing that which I conceive to be right. They may rave, I have a large share of pity for them. They may abuse, I will tender them my derision. They may attempt to ridicule; I will pay them the homage of my high contempt.

I return from this short digression to the objects of my address. I have been a democrat; the enthusiastic admirer of republican institutions from an early period of my life; I saw (or thought I saw) during the four years of Mr. Adams' administration, a spirit hostile to the happiness of this country. I tho' I beheld the principle of the British monarchy reduced to practice by the enactment of the alien and sedition laws. I saw an army raised (as I then thought) for the subversion of our liberties. I trembled for my country. At that time extremely young (having scarce obtained my 17th year) it is to be wondered at, that my imagination should take the designed alarm, and that I should become the opponent of Mr. Adams. From honest motive I was opposed to his re-election and from that moment I enlisted under the banners of a democratic faction. Alarmed at what I then thought to be the tendency of Mr. Adams' policy, I viewed with a jaundiced eye every measure of his administration; and in each I fancied I beheld a recognition of principles unfriendly to our prosperity because hostile to republican institutions. On the other hand what did I behold? A glowing portrait was presented for my imagination to feast on. Mr. Jefferson drawn at full length, in that splendid, that luscious language, which never fails of making an impression on a young mind, and unfortunately covers for a time the mischief it is designed to occasion. I was deceived. Relying with implicit confidence on the opinion of some of my friends, I became the advocate of Mr. Jefferson. I repeat that at this time I was very young. Nothing appeared to me more heinous than monarchy. Nothing seemed more lovely than uncontrolled liberty.

Harried on by an enthusiastic devotion to this bewitching Goddess, her votaries I thought must of course be the friends of mankind; and, consequently, deserving of their approbation. Mr. Jefferson had made sacrifices at her altar. It was he who was said to have penned the declaration of our independence. It was he who advocated in Virginia, the exercise of rights dear to every friend of humanity; the rights of conscience. He was said to be the friend of Washington, and the admirer of our excellent constitution. What more could be alleged? What more could be wanted to designate him as the most proper character to fill the presidential chair? To me it was evident that he ought to be elected. I did not vote for him; I could not, my youth prevented me; but I advocated his election; I spoke; I wrote in his defence. I saw him elected; I saw him elected with a satisfaction which I cannot describe. Our country was at that time divided into two large parties. With intentions however honorable, with motives however pure, I yet dreaded the predominance of the federal party, because I conscientiously believed that their principles would gradually lead to the subversion of our freedom.

Animosity had crept in among us; friendship had been broken; the public mind was considerably agitated; and even the cords of relationship burst asunder, when assailed by those political passions which spread their infectious influence from the sage in the cabinet, to the peasant at his plough. At a juncture like this, the most eminent talents were certainly called for. To calm that sea of politics which had been so much ruffled, to sweep from our country that discord which must ultimately tarnish its fame; to unite us all as a band of brothers, and make us see by experience the necessity and advantage of that union; these were objects to the execution of which I thought Mr. Jefferson was equal; and therefore hailed his election as an event pregnant with the most blissful consequences to ourselves and posterity. Well, he has been elected; and now let us enquire what are the benefits which have resulted from this event.

I have assigned my reasons for being his advocate. I trust it will be admitted that these reasons ought to have had powerful weight upon my mind. They convinced me that Mr. Jefferson ought to have been elected.

But what are the reasons which have since induced me to abandon him and his party, I will in a subsequent number assign. I have already extended this to a greater length than I intended; but I persuade myself, fellow citizens, you will forgive this intrusion upon your time, from a young man who writes to vindicate what is dear to him as excellence; his reputation.

From the (New Haven) VISITOR.

The CONNECTICUT TATLER.

By Timothy Tickle, Esq.

 As I was sitting last night in my great arched chair by the fire side, and smoking my pipe, as is my custom before I retire, ruminating on my last week's adventures, and preparing to diversify their faithful relation with the greatest luxuriance of realities, my lucubrations were interrupted by a friend, who called to inform me, that a letter was left at ———, for Timothy Tickle, Esq. Immediately my pea-green broadcloth was taken down; and my little round gold buckles instantly adjusted. With the aid of my fine ebony staff, the letter was soon obtained, and the seal already deformed, when a strange gentleman in tatters laid hold of the middle button hole of my coat, with the two fingers of his right hand which were disengaged from a pinch of snuff. "Pray, Mr. Tickle," said he, "just walk up stairs—I have a snug little corner there for a study, and half my bed will serve you for a seat, while I communicate something of importance." There was something in his look, for which philosophers have in vain endeavoured to find a name; but which attracted involuntary attention. He accordingly was gratified. We had scarcely reached his "snug little corner," when suddenly stepping forward, he took a yellow scroll from a shelf, and placed it in my hands. "I have only to request you," said the stranger (taking another pinch of rappee) "at some leisure hour to peruse this manuscript—it contains something which may amply repay you for the trouble."

"But my friend," I replied in surprise, "are you conversant with my character? Recollect that I am a professional Tatler—that I keep no secrets, and will be entrusted with none." He said not a word, but shut the door. Agreeably to my declaration, I have, with considerable hesitation, determined to amuse my readers with the contents of this remarkable scroll, and to prefix a few introductory observations on fragment writing—after informing the strange gentleman and all similar politicians, that a love of personalities is not the bright side of my character.

Fragment writing has been frequently practised, both by the ancients and moderns, and to great advantage.

There is in human nature an unaccountable propensity, vulgarly called curiosity. This propensity, when not gratified with a disclosure of the whole, leads us to expect that the hidden portion contains something of greater consideration, than what is revealed. Thus many specious effusions have been esteemed valuable in fragment, which had they appeared in full dress, with the names of their authors, might have quietly remained on the book-seller's shelf. Altho' convinced the remark is just, yet I am no enemy to this species of writing. I regret that the moderns have not more generally practised it, and I look forward with anxious solicitude, to that glorious era, when the writers of my own country will make up for this delinquency. My readers will less wonder at my zeal, when they are informed, that the scroll which was given me by the stranger (who, as I have since learned, is the much celebrated Erdras Pamphilius, Esq.) is a mere catalogue of the collection of manuscript fragments now in his possession. And since they may afford some amusement, if not instruction to the reader, although they exceed the ordinary limits of a Tatler, I will furnish him with the following list of Modern Manuscripts.

1st. The Perpetual Motion, or a Project to pay off the National Debt, dedicated to A. Gallatin, Esq. secretary of the treasury. To which is added by way of appendix, The Camelion, or Art of Living upon Air.

2d. The Political Mill, or Modern Art of Politics, in whom any person may be ground over, so as to become a good democrat with the utmost dispatch: From designs by the ingenious P—E—, Esq.

3d. A Treatise on Chremancy, or Pal-mistry Improved; in which is set forth the courtly art of Fortune telling; teaching how, by properly crossing the hand, to arise to great riches and honors—By Stephen Rowe Bradley, Esq. Senator from Vermont.

4th. Solomon's a fool or the Art of Political Thinking—By Gen. W—H—.

N. B. This curious pamphlet will serve equally well for both parties.

5th. Apologia Politica et Rhetorica being an essay to save dry dock reputations—humbly inscribed to Thomas Jefferson, L. L. D. P. A. P. S. and President of the United States, by the President's broomstick, Gen. Sam. Smith of Baltimore.

6th. Religio Bibliopola, or the Encouragement of Religion and Polite Literature, containing the oration and arguments of Gothamiah Bookwit, citizen, pronounced at New Haven, March 9th, 1803—tending to prove that Tom Paine, Tom Jefferson, and Robinson Crusoe, are as pious men and fine writers as—himself.

7th. The Art of Dancing made easy to Young Practitioners, dedicated to the "ornament of human nature," in consequence of a hint received from Mr. Jefferson's letter to the New Haven merchants—By two venerable Deacons, not exceeding 80 years of age!

8th. Multum in Parvo, or the Power of Sensibility, a poem on "a little thing about so big!"—By Johnny Randolph, "the Presidential bagpipe."

9th. Parvum in Multo, or Senatorial Oratory—By Senator Cooke of Tennessee—proving that "he could not if he should try"—dedicated to himself.

Cum multus alis, quæ prescribere longum est.

* See the Senators speech in answer to that of Gouverneur Morris, upon the petition of certain Judges of the District of Columbia.

PHILADELPHIA, April 19.

The English ship Mary, Captain Temple, in 32 days from Falmouth, arrived at Norfolk on the 5th inst.

This ship was chartered by the British government, to bring out to America, sixty one American seamen, (at ten guineas per head,) who has been impeded into the British navy during the late war. She sailed from London the 9th of November bound to Norfolk; and after being out seven days sprung a leak and put into Falmouth. While she was at sea a fever broke out amongst the seamen, which proved fatal to eighteen of them, chiefly blacks. On her arrival at Falmouth, which was the 17th of Nov. she was put under strict quarantine, and detained there until the 4th March; and was released only through the earnest solicitations of the American Consul to the government, and sailed from that place, with the yellow flag hoisted.

It is said, that accounts have been received from Cape Francois, of two regiments of Polanders, who arrived with the French troops having revolted and joined the brigands.

Arrived, ship Hore, Edwie, London; sch'r Success, Tice, Richmond; sloop, Olive Branch, Pearl, do.

THURSDAY, APRIL 21.

Extract of a letter from the mercantile house of James Duff (British Consul) dated Cadiz, 23d Feb. 1803, to a mercantile house in Philadelphia.

"The trade with your states has been in a manner interrupted by the late quarantine regulations with regard to vessels coming from thence to this port; but by a late order from government the qua-ntine on vessels from the United States is now fixed at 20 days instead of 40; provided they bring bills of health certified by the Spanish Consuls, without which requisite they are not admitted at all. It is hoped the quarantines here may be yet fixed at a shorter term, which would restore the trade and intercourse between the two countries to their mutual advantage and facility. Enclosed is the price current."

PARTIES.

If cool, deliberate reflection, unbiassed by prejudice, untroubled by the violence of party animosity, were suffered to review the past six years of our political affairs; if candid and unimpassioned enquiry were allowed for a moment to predominate over the rant of democracy; if the numerous charges, which have engendered in the hot beds of faction, which have been reared and opposed to the federal administration, by the malignant influences of party spirit, were fairly discussed; how inefficient, how nerveless would be the arm of democracy. A power bottomed on deception, would dissolve, and like the baseless fabric of a vision leave not a wreck behind." This discussion federal-ists invite, they challenge the whole hull of democracy to substantiate charges, which as yet, rest only on assertion.— What! can it for a moment be believed that the tried patriots of our country, men who fought its battles and atchieved its independence, were enemies to the liberties they had secured?— Can it for a moment be believed, that when we trembling stood upon "the brink, the very verge of liberty," the man "who was foremost in the storm, who rode upon the neck of danger and plunged upon a purpose big with death," can it be believed that this man and his copatriots were traitors to that country, and had formed the nefarious design of sacrificing its independence? Can it for a moment be believed that the virtuous Washington, the savior of his country and the guardian of its rights, with his political associates, had contemplated to establish a monarchy on the ruins of republicanism, and rivet the chains which they had just broken? Folly and stupidity can alone be duped by such a belief.

Yet this is a charge, which, with unblushing confidence, with malignant pleasure, democrats urge against the real authors of our independence; against the projectors of our constitution; against the organizers of our government. It is true, that in the grateful moments of self complacency, when success had crowned the exertions of his party, Mr. Jefferson, with all the modesty of unassuming merit, but as an artful decoy for the minds of the ignorant, eulogized the "bright constellations," who had gone before him; and passed an almost unqualified approbation on an administration, who left the government "in the full tide of successful experiment."

Yet these declarations but ill accord with those contained in his letter to Maz-zei. The weakness of inconsistency, of the turpitude of hypocrisy must be stamped upon the man, who will utter opinions glaringly contradictory. Charges like these however have had their effect to warp the minds of the credulous, and to excite an odium against an administration, honest in its views, upright in its conduct, and guided in its deliberations by the purest principles of patriotism. The ingratitude of republics is proverbial, and striking examples are afforded in the history of all republican governments, evincive of its truth. Yet it will be found that it is not the unbiased voice of the people, but the artful management of demagogues,—the violent effects of parti-zans, that have caused injustice to be done to meritorious public servants, and this for the sole purpose of building upon the ruins of their political enemies.

(Patrist.)

LAW REPORT.

Burke v. Rogers.

This case was conducted by Mr. Gibbs and Mr. Scarlet on the part of the plaintiff, and Mr. Erskine for the defendant.

It was an action brought on a policy of insurance from Lisbon to Falmouth, on the ship Capley, valued at 1200l; on a cargo of salt valued at 400l; and also on freight at 400l.

The learned counsel said Mr. Burke had brought this action not only to recover a just demand, but to repel a most injurious attack that had been made on his character. It had been reported that he had procured those who were on board the ship to cast her away on purpose; that they had run her on the rocks for the express purpose of destroying the ship and cargo, that he might come upon the underwriters.

If any such attack was made, he should not be sorry that it would give him an opportunity of repelling it. This ship sailed with her cargo, and when she got over the Bar she met with exceeding bad weather, and an heavy sea, was obliged to return, and was cast on a rock, where she remained for twenty minutes, and received such considerable damage, that it was found necessary to unload her cargo of salt; and if the ship had been repaired there, they must have warehoused the cargo, which would have cost more than the value of the salt.
It would have required two months to have repaired the ship. In this situation of things, the plaintiff abandoned to the underwriters; as his lordship would inform them he had a right to do, and went in this action for a total loss.

The facts of this opening were proved by several witnesses. When they proved the plaintiff's abandonment to the underwriters, they also read the answer to Messrs.
Crowther and Levie, the solicitors for the underwriters. It was to this effect: "that the underwriters did not see the propriety of the plaintiff's abandoning where so inconsiderable a loss had been sustained; that the plaintiff should proceed to repair the ship; and that the underwriters would ultimately pay any loss or demand that could be fairly brought against them."

Mr. Erskine, for the underwriters, in the course of his very eloquent speech observed, this was a point of infinite moment to the lawwriting world. He submitted this could never be a case of the abandonment, after what had already appeared in the cause. The ship might have been repaired for between three and four hundred pounds, and there was only a loss of 3 per cent. on the cargo; and if the ship had been repaired, and brought home, the cargo and the freight would have been saved to his clients; and if there had been a small deficiency of freight, on account of part of the salt being dissolved, the underwriters on the freight would have made up that loss. As to the report that was circulated against Mr. Burke's character, he did not believe there was the least foundation for it; and therefore he might make himself perfectly easy on that head.

The plaintiff in such a case as this, had no right to abandon as for a total loss without the consent of the underwriters.
Without that consent the assured had no right to abandon, when the adventure was not lost, when the vessel had been but one day out of port, when, in the space of forty days she was capable of being repaired at a moderate expense, and could be rendered capable of performing her voyage.

Lord Ellenborough summed up the evidence, as it applied distinctly to the ship, the cargo, and the freight, which his lordship observed might be considered as three distinct policies of insurance.
His lordship, in delivering his opinion to the jury, evidently inclined to consider thi-as an average, and not as a total loss.— However, he left the whole case to the jury. He said they might find a total loss as to one of these three things, and an average as to another.

The jury found the loss to be an average loss with regard to all the three points, the ship, the cargo, and the freight; and they said that Mr. Wood was as fit as any man in the kingdom to ascertain the amount of that average. It was therefore referred to him

GENERAL METEOROLOGICAL STATE- MENT.

[According to the last Reports.]

England. Rather too temperate for the time.

Ireland. Atmosphere lowering. Damps very prevalent.

Scotland. Remarkably serene. Invigorating gales from the South; influence delightful.

France. Still stormy and blustering.
Changes expected. Paris. Light airs never two days alike.

Holland.—Dull, stupid, and foggy.

Sweden and Denmark. More temperate than for many seasons. Seas open.

Russia. Still raw, but daily more genial; wind tending strongly to the South, but rather weering.

Germany and Netherlands. Varying, disturbed, and unsettled for this long time; ice clearing away, but still unpleasant.

Prussia. Very still and close; but not to be relied upon.

Poland. Dreadfully ravaged of late by storms. Ground frightfully parted by convulsions.

Switzerland. Short delusive gleams of sunshine; but upon the whole, very chilling; Air of the mountains not so bracing as formerly.

Piedmont. Several fortresses completely dismantled by a strong convulsion.—Royal palace completely overthrown.

Spain. An oppressive calm. Fog impenetrable. At Gibraltar slight convulsions; soon subsided.

Portugal. Air quite stagnated. Infermountable languors; dreadful depref-sions; heavy clouds impending, Falling sickness dreaded.

Italy. Always a favoured climate; degenerated of late years; but rapidly recovering its pristine temperature.

Rome. Milder and stiller every day.

Corfica. Delightful sunshine, Elestian gales. Seasons of late remarkably propitious.

Genoa. Differing little from the South of France, but more subject to storms. Situation every year less pleasant.

Venice. Daily losing ground from inundations. Declines very prevalent.

Etruria. Surprisingly altered for the worse. A good rain much wanted.

Naples. Sky dreadfully overcast.— Great tremblings; further convulsions dreaded. Vesuvius their least alarm.

Malta. Just as by last advices, and it is hoped likely to continue so.

Coast of Barbary. Every day more insupportable.

Turkey. Subject to great and awful changes. Plague and French epidemic rapidly gaining ground. Dr. Smith anxiously looked for from England.

Egypt. Nile sunk to nothing. People much dispirited; strong symptoms of the old plague returning.

Syria. Threatening skies; constant alarms. Return of the great Comet daily looked for. Great confidence in English Astronomers.

East Indies. Tranquil at present; but threatened with Egyptian Kamien.

St. Domingo. Too hot for European constitutions. Blacks, notwithstanding, in high spirits and healthy.

Jamaica. Distant rumblings, &c strong symptoms of a hurricane.

North America. Threatening, sharp, and squally; but breezes very salubrious.

Vaccine Inoculation.

For a more general diffusion of this benefit to society—as a means to extinguish that dreadful disease, the Small Pox.

The subscriber proposes to those who wish to extend so important a consideration, that an institution be formed in some respect on the plan of Dr. James Smith of Baltimore—by a subscription of one dollar to intitle to send four, and so in proportion to any number of persons, whose circumstances deny them the benefit otherwise with convenience.

Those disposed to favor the plan will please apply at Mr. Samuel Bishop's Book Store, Royal Street, where a subscription paper is left, or to the subscriber in Prince Street.
